

To whom it may concern:

I impress upon you the importance of keeping Net Neutrally for the people of these great United States. It is important to keep access to the internet available to without lining the pockets of those who are already swimming in money. Net neutrality is important to people everywhere, of all walks of life, whether they know about it or even understand it. The abolishment of Net Neutrality is one more way of oppressing those who want to better educate themselves on the world they in which they live in. This is not about access to television repeats or social media. This is not an area for government to dismantle because they can without the majority of those who rely on the internet for their job, their education, their access to journalism, etc. even knowing what is happening under their noses or behind closed doors - this should not happen period.

Thank you for your time.

Stacey Borgens

Frankfort, IL